Out with trees, hello pavement

ENVIRONMENT

Councillor upset at loss of 111 trees on Anderson Rd.

A southwest Calgary councillor says the city failed to consult before making plans to cut down. 111 trees along Anderson Road.

Diane Colley-Urquhart said the city already lost half of its tree canopy with the 2014 Snowtember storm.

"And then you have them ripping out the canopy out with absolutely no consultation at all," she said.

The trees along Anderson west of Elbow Drive have to go so the road can be widened from four lanes to six, in anticipation of traffic.

The city will be planting more than double the amount of trees that are being cut down. A total of 281 new poplar and spruce will be replanted.

Melanie Ducharme, spokeswoman for the city, said workers are taking the smallest number of trees possible.

She also noted there has been ongoing consultation with community associations in the area

The trees were too old and too unhealthy to be moved, according to Ducharme. A dozen will be used to create fish habitat, and the rest will be turned into free mulch for local residents.

Although Colley-Urquhart would like the work to stop until more consultation is done, Ducharme said that won't be possible.

"The trees have to be removed now to avoid issues with nesting birds," she said.

Cecil Jahrig, past president of Wood Creek Community Association, was aware that the trees would be coming out and described it as a necessary evil.

He's OK with the fact that smaller trees will take their place.

"They will be obviously small trees, and 20 years from now when they decide they need four lanes on each side, they'll cut those trees down and the next generation will squawk about it," he said.

Beer-league team makes pitch

CAMPAIGN

Hope Hockey Canada will consider its Olympic bid

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

A Calgary men's beer-league team is throwing its name in the mix with the hope that Hockey Canada will consider it to represent Canada at the next winter Olympics in South Korea.

Calgary's Canadian Citizens said after they heard that the NHL had made the decision not to allow their players to participate in the Games, the team jokingly began tossing around the idea that it would be great for some "average Joes" to represent Canada on the world stage (traditionally meant for the globe's elite athletes).

In a letter penned by Kyle Kemp, he explains he and his teammates were disappointed by the NHL's decision, but that their "division 9" beer-league team, which finished seventh this past season, would "proudly represent their country" and are "ready to make the jump to international competition."

"We've all grown up with various aspects, whether that's ball hockey, street hockey or ice hockey — every Canadian kid at one point has the lifelong dream to play hockey, right? So it'd be pretty cool."

In the letter, the Citizens said since they all already reside in Calgary, Hockey Canada would save on travel costs and training camp.

"In fact, training may not be necessary, as our current warm-ups consist of unorthodox drills like 'winded from walking to the ice," 'the broken windmill,' and 'who hit Pat in the head? (FYI — Pat is our goaltender)," the letter reads.

The team has gained some support online, with many people retweeting the team's letter — and most recently the team has been challenged by another beer-league team of Olympic hopefuls in Virginia known as the Cluster Pucks, made up of 15 male and female players ranging in age from "late 20s to somewhere on either side of 50, depending on who shows up that week.'

The Cluster Pucks said their pre-game rituals include "pre-gaming in the parking lot, some with cigarettes, most with beer or other alcoholic libations."

"Once we make it to the ice, we excel in aimlessly skating around in circles and shooting pucks in the general direction of an open net. Sometimes we even hit it," wrote team meniber Aaron Risdal in response to Kemp's letter.

Kemp said the Canadian Citizens have yet to hear back from Hockey Canada, but should the opportunity to travel to South Korea in 2018 for the Olympics arise?

"I expect we'd all be there in a heartbeat," he said. "With that said we've planned a team golf tournament every summer for the last 10 years and it's fallen through every time, so you know, this might be different given the scope of things."

Council to debate $23.7M in tax room

City council will have an interesting debate on Monday — what to do with $23.7 million in tax room left behind by the provincial government.

Administration notes that council can put the money towards "various critical initiatives" if so needed, but otherwise recommends returning it to taxpayers.

Ward 10 councillor and mayoral candidate Andre Chabot is unhappy with how the idea of tax room is framed. He said it isn't the province giving the city $23.7 million, but rather the province is not taking that much of taxpayer's money.

"The only way we can create this $23 million is by taxing Calgarians another $23 million," he said.

Coun. Shane Keating said if the $23.7 million is applied back to citizens' tax bills, it would result in a savings of about $5 a month — money he noted could make a difference in these difficult times.

Grade 6 students gather around plans as they create landscaping for the 4 Avenue Flyover project, COURTESY ALI MOMILLAN

Kids seeing their park dreams become reality

CITY PLANNING

4th Avenue Flyover space getting revamp from Grade 6ers

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

It's a melding of ideas, and utilization of a forgotten space under the 4th Avenue flyover — turned into a Calgary park to connect downtown to community that's come out of the mouths, or imaginations, of babes.

On Thursday, Grade 6 students from Langevin School, and master's landscape architect students from the University of Calgary. are unveiling six concepts to revamp forgotten landscaping for users travelling between Bridgeland and Riverside to the city's core.

After community members have the chance to look them over they'll go from pencil crayon and paper to real-life structures by the end of this summer.

"For some kids it hasn't set in yet." teacher Kate Logan said. "And some of them, lights are going on, and they're saying, 'Oh my goodness, I was drawing a picture of a slide on my book, and now it's in a plan to move forward."

Of course, there were some out-there ideas, like a roller-coaster, but mostly she said students were able to come up with designs that induce play and inclusion

"What was really neat was they actually have a lot of compassion," said Bridgeland planner Ali McMillan. "They thought a lot about sounds, and added ideas on how to make beautiful sounds in a place that has loud noise, traffic and wind."

Jen Malzer, the city's transportation engineer and project manager, said students were asked to tap into their imaginations and take on the persona of potential park users, like an elderly woman with grandkids or dog walkers.

"We've benefitted from the students." Malzer said.

But the project doesn't end here. Logan and fellow teacher Elaine McCrady said they're on to the next phase of their project: piloting some of the ideas students had in terms of tactical urbanism.

"Once the design has been decided on the kids will be involved in building and designing temporary installations," Logan said. "They're also involved in doing presentations and sharing of their work."

When pointed out that for the students, and average Calgarians, this sort of opportunity is unheard of, both agree.

"For them to see a lasting legacy," McCrady said. "It's really cool for them to know their voice can be heard within the city's level of planning."

And, of course being teachers, they're trying to figure out what's next for students and how they can continue to take ownership of the space in years to come.

PROGRAM

Five sites to offer $25 a day child care

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

Calgary will be receiving 320 spaces in the Early Learning and Child Care (ELCC) Centres program that caps daily fees at $25.

Across the province, the ELCC Centres will offer nearly 1,300 affordable spaces, and according to Alberta's government, they will also "respond to a number of gaps in the existing child care system," including cost, the diverse needs of kids and flexible hours for parents.

"Too many parents have had the experience of struggling to afford quality child care for their kids," said Premier Rachel Notley. "These ELCC pilot centres will allow us to explore how affordable quality child care works to support children and families and how we can best expand this support in the years to come."

Five centres in Calgary have been awarded grants through the pilot program. They are the Thornhill Child Care Society, EvenStart Early Childhood Development Centre, Little Sundance Child Care Centre, Hillhurst-Sunnyside Day Care Centre and CFS Parent Child Learning Centre.

The spaces will cost parents $25 a day and will include other benefits, including community partnerships, support for inclusive programming and access to parenting resources and supports for vulnerable families.

Opposition Wildrose member Jason Nixon said they will watch the pilot project closely.

"Ultimately when we're done this process we have to end up with a daycare process that works for as many Albertans as possible," said Nixon.

Veteran's niece makes Vimy Ridge journey

Woman makes journey as part of History Channel doc

Lucie Edwardson Metro Calgary

As Kathie Betts-Geddes read the names listed on the Vimy Ridge memorial in France her breath was taken away. It's where her uncle Earl, a sniper, lost his life on the first day of the bloody Vinny Ridge battle, and where her grandfather buried his brother in an unknown grave.

"They were inseparable, they did everything together, and then they went to war together," she said.

Betts-Geddes, a Calgarian, travelled to Vinny Ridge and other war memorials throughout France as part of History Channel Canada's documentary Searching for Vimy's Lost Soldiers.

The documentary will premier Sunday, marking the 100th anniversary of the battle of Vimy Ridge. The doc follows military historian Norm Christie, his tearn of geophysicists, bomb disposal experts, and families of the missing soldiers on a mission to locate and recover the men of CA40 in an effort to give them the "proper commemoration they deserve."

Betts-Geddes said Christie led her and her daughter, along with representatives from four other families of soldiers considered "lost" at Vimy on a week-long trip of memorials, cemeteries and battlefield visits - each stop resonating with Betts-Geddes in different ways.

"The day we were on the battlefield it was chilly, but then you think about these men, especially from the Scottish battalions who wore their kilts in battle," she said. "And, sometimes, Norm. had mentioned, they would be waist deep in mud. For me to try and envision that — you just

On another day, Betts-Geddes said they visited the Maison Blanche tunnels where up to 300 soldiers bunked at a time. She said they were there with another Alberta family, the Snelgroves who live in Vermillion, and whose ancestor had done a carving in one of the caves.

"They got to see it first of course because it's very personal and just an incredible moment for them, and so for us to see the carvings after was amazing." she said. The group also visited Notre Dame De Lorette, where a large oval rock has been erected and has more 579,000 names inscribed.

"It doesn't say if they are friend or foe," said Betts-Geddes. "Anybody who was in the war was listed. It was really beautiful, this oval - an infinite circle, no beginning, no end."

It's still unknown where Earl Betts, top, was buried by his brother on the first day of the battle of Vimy Ridge. CONTRIBUTED

Festival setup for little Greta, who needs liver transplant

Elizabeth Cameron For Metro | Calgary

When Lindsay Chadderton heard the story of a Calgary girl hoping for a last-chance liver transplant in the U.S., he felt compelled to act.

Three-year-old Greta Marofke has hepatoblastoma, a rare form of liver cancer that typically affects young children. She was ineligible for a transplant in Alberta because her chances of survival were deemed too low, but doctors at the Cincinnati Children's Hospital said they were willing to try and make it happen, against all odds.

Greta and her family have been travelling back and forth between their home in Calgary and the U.S. hospital ever since.

"The story really reached me. I haven't even met her, but I just felt we had to do something," said Chadderton, the general manager at Getto Boys Bar & Grill.

He started making calls to organize a music festival — now dubbed Guitars for Greta — in support of the family.

Thirty acts are playing the festival, which will serve up local, original music from all genres on three different stages at the bar.

In the two months since the family launched a GoFundMe to help with finances (Greta's treatment costs in the U.S. are not covered by insurance), nearly $200,000 has been raised, and Chadderton hopes to raise an additional $100,000 at the event.

"I pulled out all the stops, I reached out to every person I've dealt with and said 'listen, I need you guys to donate everything,' and that's what we did. Every nickel from that day will go (the family)," said

Greta Marofke, CONTRIBUTED

Chadderton.

During her last trip to Cincinnati, Greta underwent radioembolization, a process that applies intense doses of radiation directly onto a tumour.

That was 2 weeks ago, and in just 11 days, the doctors in Cincinnati will be able to determine whether a transplant is viable or not.

"Now, it's a little bit of a waiting game to see if it worked," said Greta's mother, Lindsey Marofke.

She said so far Greta's care team is realistic, but optimistic.

All-or-nothing approach does not make sense: Councillor

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

What's next in the CalgaryNEXT conversation?

Coun. Shane Keating is hoping for an elevated discourse; less all-or-nothing, no public funds, and those who argue we need an arena no matter what.

Lately talk of CalgaryNEXT has been polarizing. Mayor Naheed Nenshi declared the project was dead. Ken King quipped back letting the public know it's not dead, just resting. This was then followed by a confusing radio appearance where King seemed to say if we don't build the new digs the Flames might pack up and leave.

"What I want to know is what the public feeling is on that one crucial word, I feel, and that's investing," said Keating. "And to what level? Are we saying we won't even put $100 into it?"

The Ward 12 councillor is trying to gauge where exactly public interest lies, so that municipal politicians can make informed decisions about how to strike a deal.

"There has to be some credible way of getting the public's feeling on the definition of what investing means, and what the limit is," said Keating. "It's ridiculous for us to sit here and say not one dollar is put into helping get a new arena in the city."

He added giving the Calgary Sports and Entertainment Corporation a no-strings-attached lump sum doesn't make sense either.

Instead he sees scenarios with a loan, or a revenue sharing model.

When Metro asked for comment from Ken King about Keating's call for better public discourse, and possible loan models, there wasn't time in his schedule. Instead, CSEC pointed to a financing page on the Calgary-NEXT website.

information about the West Village plan It's ridiculous for using $240 us to sit here and million from a Community say not one dollar Revitalization and $200 million from the city.

But if the West Village site isn't where the arena dream lands, it's unclear if using the CRL is even possible.

"It has nothing to do with the CRL," said Keating. He explained if the arena moves locales funding through the levy wouldn't be possible because it wouldn't technically be redeveloping lands, but building somewhere development is already ongoing.

Post-secondary faculty regain right to strike

Alberta's post-secondary labourers are getting back what they'd lost somewhere in the shuffle: the right to strike.

In 2015, a Supreme Court of Canada decision reinforced the right to strike as a fundamental unionized worker right. It immediately became clear that in Alberta, where numerous working unions have had a prohibition on striking, something needed to change. But for some faculty associations, like The Faculty Association of the University of Calgary, the transition isn't going to be a smooth one.

"Effective immediately we've lost the right to binding arbitration," said faculty president Sandra Hoenle. "If we get to a point in bargaining where a dispute can't be resolved, either side can go to arbitration — if there's an impasse now the only binding dispute resolution mechanism is a strike or a lockout. We've never had to prepare for a strike."

She noted they need time to build up funds, and create protocols, rules and processes.

The Act to Enhance Post-Secondary Academic Bargaining hasn't passed yet, but it would bring the province in line with all other Canadian provinces. It will allow academic staff associations and graduate student associations to strike, while also extending that right to postdoctoral fellows associations.

Before striking all institutions must negotiate essential service agreements. And, of course, the institutions themselves will now be able to lock workers out.

After tabling Bill 7, Advanced Education Minister Marlin Schmidt said he knows the transition will take time.

"This really represents the majority of the recommendations," said Schmidt. "It reflects the general will of the stakeholders."

Mass killer vows to not relapse

De Grood says feels the pain of victims' relatives

A Calgary man who killed five people with a knife is blaming the crimes on his mental illness and is trying to reassure the victim's families that he is getting better.

Matthew de Grood was suffering from a mental disorder when he attacked and killed Zackariah Rathwell, 21; Jordan Segura, 22; Josh Hunter, 23; Kaitlin Perras, 23, and Lawrence Hong, 27 at a house party three years ago.

The judge in the case ruled de Grood didn't appreciate his actions were wrong and was not criminally responsible.

The Alberta Review Board is determining whether de Grood, who is housed in a secure hospital, should be granted more

In a statement read by his lawyer, de Grood says he understands the pain of the families who watched his every move throughout the hearing.

"It breaks my heart that the good times that they had with their loved ones are over. They are shocked, deeply sad, fearful and angry over what I have done through my illness," he said in the statement.

"They may not care that I am a schizophrenic. The act of killing five innocent people and putting their families through that agony is unconscionable. To them, I am either a very evil person or a psychotic individual who is dangerous and can't be trusted."

In his statement de Grood said he would have sought treatment if he had known he was ill and has been responding well to treatment.

"It is hard for me to imagine what I could do to ease the pain I have caused, but I promise to do everything in my power to ensure I never relapse. I respect the decisions of the board."

Fay said de Grood had planned to read his statement but was unable to do so.

"He initially wanted to but certainly, hearing from the victims was very difficult for him. He was overwhelmed to the point where he did not think he could do so."

Several family members read victim impact statements and most were angry that they had to relive the pain of the loss just a week before the third anniversary of the deaths.

"I'm appalled to be here today," said Gregg Perras. "I cannot express the anguish and anger that I feel. Our nightmare continues every day and days like this ... is a real-life horror."

Patty Segura said the justice system has made her feel invisible.

"What right does Matthew de Grood have to do this severe damage? They were all good kids," Segura said. "My future is gone."

Income support claims 'skyrocketing'

SOCIAL SERVICES

Professor says provincial agencies in 'dire straits'

"Skyrocketing" is a strong word, but it's exactly what the University of Calgary's School of Public Policy is using to describe the rising number of income support caseloads in Alberta.

According to data from the province, the number of claimants has soared since 2006, when the province was at a low of 24,205 cases, to a peak in January of 54,374.

"It's really remarkable that it's been that big of a change, and I think it's a sign of just how deep the recession has been - and how much it's really impacting people on the low-end of the income scale," said Ron Kneebone, a professor with U of C's School of Public Policy.

Provincially-funded income supports are made available when other streams of assistance, such as Employment Insurance, run out.

He said the provincial government should be increasing funding for agencies that provide Albertans with income and social supports.

"(They're) in pretty dire straits," Kneebone said. "They are now on the last part of the social safety net. After this, there's nothing."

He said the rise in cases indicates social assistance agencies will be facing even greater demand on already-stretched resources.

For the past two years, the Calgary Urban Planning Society (CUPS), which provides assistance to low-income families and children in Calgary with a focus on health, education and housing, has seen a 10 per cent increase in claimants annually.

That represents an additional 1,000 Albertans a year.

"It's very, very busy and challenging, of course," said Cheryl Lemieux, senior director at CUPS.

She said the majority of people coming in need crisis emergency funding, "basically to prevent them from falling into homelessness or back into it again."

The non-profit has to refer people to other agencies regularly, according to Lemieux.

"It's pretty tough, we only have so much money per month to give out ... from a human service perspective, it's devastating," she said.

The #ReadyForHer tour is taking a second lap in its push to get more women to run for band councils, municipal office and public school boards in Alberta.

On Thursday, the province announced a spring tour for the initiative, which encourages and helps prepare women in Alberta to run for office.

With a municipal election on Oct. 16, it's time to start hitting the campaign trail.

"Nearly a quarter of Alberta's a single woman on their council. I imagine there must be no women in those communities," said Minister of Status of Women Stephanie McLean, speaking at a campaign school event hosted by the Public School Boards' Association of Alberta's (PSBAA) Campaign School in Edmonton.

"(It's) not good enough, because women are half of the population."

While more than half of Alberta's school trustees are women, on average, they only account for 26 per cent of council seats. Calgary has two woman councillors; Edmonton has one.

Several panel discussions will be held across the province for women considering a run to ask questions and for mentors to share their personal experiences in public office.

Arlene Hrynyk, president of the PSBAA, said now is the time for a new generation of women to throw their hat in the polit-

"We know many women curtowns and cities don't even have rently holding seats on school boards and municipal councils will choose not to seek re-election in the fall," Hrynyk said.

"Our campaign school is intended to encourage candidates across this province to consider filling seats for this important service, while equipping them with the tools to run a successful campaign."

McLean said #ReadyForHer will be launching a campaign how-to video series that will indude 'insider tips' from Premier Rachel Notley and the federal Minister of Štatus of Women Maryam Monsef.

Remake of Stephen King's It just isn't making city's clowns smile

Errie franchise is harmful for business say the pros

Aaron Chatha Metro | Calgary

Calgary clowns aren't turning any frowns upside down over the new movie trailer for Stephen King's It.

When the trailer launched last week, it broke the single day record for most watched online trailer, with 197 million global views.

Local clowns hate it.

"Kids, they soak this stuff up," said Hamlet the Clown (also known as Kirk Miles). "They start getting scared of clowns, they tell their mothers they're scared of clowns. I've gotten calls asking me not to wear the clown costume – asking me to do the circus skills. You're either in for the clown, or you're not, as far as I'm concerned."

Hamlet, who's been clowning for 25 years, said the original It miniseries, starring Tim Curry as Pennywise the clown, has incited fear in kids and adults since it released in 1990 – which, of course, costs him business.

Last year, he saw problems arise from the Creepy Clown sightings across North America, and now It is piling onto the fears.

And Hamlet doesn't even wear full clown makeup – he performs in a European style, with the red nose a bit of makeup around the cheeks.

Rainbow the Clown, on the other oversized hand, wears the full gear. He's never seen the old version of It, and doesn't intend to see the new one, but is well versed in showing up to a party where the kids are already afraid of him. One time he showed up to a birthday—the entrance was down a set of stairs—and Rainbow was unlucky enough to head down directly behind two young girls.

"The girls are just screaming their heads off," he recalled.

"They had me then go upstairs.
They wanted the girls downstairs, but they were smart.
They knew I was going to end up down there eventually, and didn't want to go down."

Luckily for Rainbow, who has 22 years of professional experience, he's an old rainbow hat at calming kids down. The trick, he says, is keeping distances. Any good clown will keep their distance if someone is nervous or afraid. The girls stayed at the back of the room, Rainbow was at the front, entertaining, and throwing them the occasional smile.

As the other kids were laughing and clapping, pretty soon the girls were up there clamouring for more with the rest of them. It's just one of many techniques Rainbow incorporates. He also clowns at Calaway Park, and one of his favourite things to do with a scared child is act shy.

"The kids think that's ridiculous, that I'm afraid of them," said Rainbow. "Usually that helps warm them up."

Hamlet explained that clown makeup was never meant to be intimidating. It comes from circus days, before there were TVs to show performers faces, the clown makeup and oversize costume pieces were made so that every expression was overexaggerated — and even people at the back of the audience could tell what was going on.

While It is on the fast track to become a horror blockbuster, Hamlet and Rainbow hope Calgarians remember that clowns are awesome and often ridiculous.

"My favourite thing about Eric as a whole was they he was essentially a living, breathing cartoon character," Friedle laughed. "You couldn't go too big, but he still had that heart."

Friedle comes to Calgary Comic Expo this year known the impact Boy Meets World had on a generation of kids - because he feels the show never talked down to its audience.

BATMAN

While mostly known for his work on the show, Friedle also gained fame through voice work on shows like Kim Possible. Transformers and - notably - Batman Beyond.

He joins actors like Michael Keaton, Christian Bale and Kevin Conroy (who voiced Batman in the original animated series) who have uttered the line, "I'm Batman."

"Any time you can tell people you're Batman and not be lying is pretty neat," Friedle said. "It was tough E though, as I was sitting next to Kevin Conroy, who will always be my Batman. When you're sitting next to you're Batman, that's some pretty big shoes to fill. So it was certainly a special experience in my life."

While mostly known for his work on the show, in 2008 Strong became the first person to act and produce a political ad that aired on Comedy Central, in support of then presidential-candidate Barack Obama.

He said now, more than ever, people need to be politically aware.

"It's incredible to be that I just took for granted our country was moving in a more positive direction, and now we've seen how wrong we were," he said. "I think we're at a dangerous point - we're essentially veering toward a constitutional

GROWING UP

While a generation watched Shawn grow on Boy Meets World, one of Strong's biggest influences as a child was working on his first sitcom Julie with Julie Andrews.

"She immediately was the sweetest, nicest person. Took me under her wing and we had a lot of fun," Strong said. "I looked up to her. I loved her, I genuinely loved her."

Edwards, a legendary director, was a bit grumpy and not adept and working on a multicamera TV show.

But for the Strong, the experience marked the beginning of a lifelong career.

Kinkonauts celebrate 10 years with first improv festival

Aaron Chatha Metro | Calgary

The Kinkonauts are almost like Calgary's scrappy version of the Avengers — their lineup changes up a lot, but for the last decade they've always provided a laugh in dark times.

Here's the origin story: 10 years ago, four youths realized they had the superhuman ability to make people giggle with glee. After (we assume) a heated debate about whether to use their powers for good or evil, they found a basement underneath a 17 Ave Boston Pizza to call their headquarters.

I mean, there was a dude living there who rented the space out to them to perform improv shows, but hey, not every group has a Tony Stark to bankroll them.

"It used to be a vault in the 60s or 70s, so they got rid of the vault but kept the door. It was super weird," recalled Owen Chan, founding Kinkonaut.

"We did a show once where there was a dog locked in the back room, because the guy who lived there was out of town for the night. We started like any other improv group sketchy shows in sketchy

Eventually, they started up the ladder to bigger and less sketchy locations, and realized they needed new recruits in the battle against boredom, so the Kinkonauts started teaching classes. Other than Loose Moose theatre, the Kinkonauts were one of very few schools of improv in Calgary.

They've had a lot of victories, but also a few defeats - over the years, they lost all but one of their founding members, and a few months ago they even lost their stage space.

But on the eve of the 10-year anniversary, things are looking up for the Kinkonauts.

They've found a new, pennanent location, with dedicated classroom space, in Inglewood.

"It's a bunch of people you would never think would hang out together," laughed current Kinkonaut Christine Harvey. commenting on how the current cast comes from ages and walks of life.

They're also turning the anniversary into a three-night festival with five shows, that will reunite all of the original Kinkonauts. It's kind of like a Power Ranger reunion, except the Red Kinkonaut never went to jail for stabbing someone.

There will be a night of improvised Clue, and team up Paper St. Theatre from Victoria for a night of film-noir improv.

Dubbed the Reactor Improv Festival, it takes place from April 13 to 15. For more information, check out www. kinkonauts.com.

Canada 150 Mosaic unveiled

ART

Woodlands school students, staff represent Calgary

Jennifer Friesen For Metro | Calgary

As a birthday gift to Canada, Lewis Lavoie is giving the country 80,000 painted portraits.

Or, to put it more accurately, he's giving the country one mural that's made of 150 other murals that are made of 80,000 hand-painted tiles.

The Canada 150 Mosaic project spans coast-to-coast, with each mural telling the story of the communities they were made.

As one-third of the Mural Mosaic team, the Prince Albertbased artist came to Calgary on Thursday to witness the unveiling of Calgary's mosaic, made by artists as well as the students and staff at Woodlands School.

Woodlands School was chosen to represent the city in this project, and was funded by the school council and a grant from the federal government.

"Every child in this school painted a tile," said Woodlands School principal Sheryl Highet. "It's been so dynamic, and they're all so passionate and so proud to be Canadian. It's been great, we really did this together."

Made up of 400 four-inch by four-inch tiles, Calgary's mosaic depicts a cowboy leaning against the Calgary Tower — one foot in a ski and the other in a cowboy boot. But, with a closer look, there are nods to the Stampede, the Flames and the zoo.

"It's all about diversity," said Lavoie. "In each community we go to, we try to find the DNA of that community and really try to get them to paint that into it."

Every completed mural is based on the concept of a railroad, with wheels at the base of every piece to create a link from community to the next. If the entire mural was ever connected, it would span more than four football fields.

"Canada was really founded on this railroad concept — good and bad," said Lavoie. "So we want to use that as a healing thing now."

'People want hope'

David Miller talks to Metro about how people in cities can save the environment

May Warren Metro Toronto

It's easy to feel hopeless and overwhelmed by the environmental challenges our planet is facing.

From stopping climate change to protecting endangered species, the tasks are daunting.

But that doesn't mean it's time to give up.

Everyone has the power to make a difference — in many cases right in their own backyards.

It's one of the key messages David Miller, president and CEO of World Wildlife Fund Canada, spreads every chance he gets.

Because, as he puts it, "people want hope."

"They really want to be part of something and know what they can do to make a change," he said.

"There's an incredible thirst for this."

Miller dropped by Metro's offices to talk about the environmental threats we're facing and what can be done.

TREES

The urban canopy matters for biodiversity, animals, birds and people.

It's "extremely important" to provide shade and cool the "urban heat island" that is the concrete jungle.

"There is a beauty and a majesty in trees that speaks to your soul in an urban environment," Miller said.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

People need to be inspired "to do their part," said Miller, and protecting and restoring the urban canopy needs to become a priority in cities across the country.

Think before you cut down a tree in your backyard and plant native trees on your own property where possible.

"When someone wants to cut down a tree in a neighbourhood and people come out en masse, that feeling needs to happen collectively," he said.

WILDLIFE

Miller warned of a "looming crisis in wildlife" that we're not paying attention to.

While we've been focused on climate change, two thirds of the world's population of wildlife could be gone by 2020 due to factors like deforestation.

David Miller has made his own lifestyle changes to become more environmentally friendly. PHOTOS: EDUARDO LIMA/METRO

"This is a really serious situation and it hasn't gotten nearly the attention it deserves," he said.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

Luckily, "nature has the capacity to rebuild if we let it," said Miller.

Globally, this might mean supporting conservation efforts for animals like the Siberian Tiger or the Snow Leopard.

But you can also make a difference in your own backyard or on your condo balcony.

Planting native species is one way to preserve biodiversity in an urban landscape.

WWF-Canada has programs such as In the Zone Gardens, to help with this.

"If you plant something that helps a relatively small species thrive in an urban area, you're made a real difference." Miller

"Not everything is a panda but they all matter."

POWER OF CITIES

Canadian cities have been leaders on climate change, Miller said, and "we shouldn't lose sight" of all the successes.

While provinces and the feds often talk to each other on climate change and other issues, "cities aren't seen as partners," Miller said.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

Students place in top 20 at Harvard debates

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

A group of Calgary high school students are thrilled following a positive showing at an international debate competition at the prestigious World Schools Harvard Debate Championships.

Sunint Bindra, a Grade 11 student from Sir Winston Churchill High School, said the experience was everything he could have hoped for, because it brought "the best of the best" to one competition.

"It's the epitome of the debate world, the Harvard world, and international tournaments," he said.

The Churchill team, made up of five "heavily-medalled veteran debaters" fared quite well on the international stage — up against he likes of Team USA, Team Mexico, Team Peru and more.

"We placed 20th as a team, and all of our members had very good stats, placing us all in the top 100," he said, adding that one member didn't compete in enough rounds to make the cut.

Bindra said for weeks in advance the team would prepare after school with their coaches, and at the actual competition they receive their topic and then are given one hour to prepare.

"We're not allowed any sort of technologies or tools, it's just us and our brains," he said.

Topics included: this house regrets the accelerating democratization of journalism, this house would ban cash, this house would implement a robot tax.

Churchill debate coach, Darren Kiziak, said tournaments like this improve a student's skills when they come up across "world class debaters," and cultivates critical thinking skills.

"That's really helpful in the real world and I think it's a really important skill," he said. "It also keeps them aware of current events and what's going on and that's important, too."

Calgary, get your face paint out and prepare to see a lot of clowns around; the Juggalo Weekend is here.

While this isn't quite The Gathering, the Juggalo Weekend is the first ever event of its kind in Canada, with Insane Clown Posse (ICP) headlining two shows, supported by a roster of all-star artists like Ice-T, Swollen Members, Onyx and The 2 Live Crew. The weekend is partly the brainchild of Kalman Goudkuil, founder of True Rhythm, a Calgary-based events company. Goudkuil said the annual event, which is being held at Marquee Beer Market and Stage, "follows the blueprints of the United States gatherings," and, in addition to the amazing lineup, features Juggalo championship wrestling, circus acts and carnival rides.

And Faygo. Lots and lots of Over 1,000 litres of Faygo the preferred pop of Juggalos and Juggalettes - was sprayed from the stage at the last ICP show in Calgary.

"There's a good inch or two on the ground, so if you don't want to go home feeling squishy, bring an extra pair of shoes," said Saintanik, a local hip-hop horrorcore artist.

Swollen Members are coheadlining on Friday night their first time sharing the stage in several years.

"There's a genuine air of authentic excitement that we're getting back, and most people who know me would tell you that you almost need one of those Vaudevillian canes to pull me off the stage, so I'm really looking forward to getting back with the crew," said Swollen Members MC Prevail.

He said it's no mistake Calgary was chosen for this event, "tipping his hat" to ICP for building such a prevalent and devoted fan base in and around the city.

Saintanik, who has been a Juggalo since age 13, said, "It's going to be insane, intense, an epic weekend. It's just a lot of love and respect."

Beyak bemoans 'threat' to free speech

POLITICS

Senator booted from committee due to comments

Sen. Lynn Beyak says her removal from the Senate's committee for Indigenous people is "a threat to freedom of speech," and claims she is supported by a "silent majority" of Canadians.

The Conservative party leadership booted Beyak from the Senate Committee of Aboriginal Peoples on Wednesday, stating that her controversial speech last month about an "abundance of good" in the country's widely maligned residential school system doesn't jibe with the Tory position.

In a statement Thursday, Beyak bemoaned how it is becoming "difficult" to have a "balanced, truthful discussion" about all issues in Canada.

"Political correctness is stifling opinion and thoughtful conversation that we must be allowed to have if we are to truly improve our great country," the statement said.

"Too often, on a broad range of issues, a vocal minority cries foul and offence whenever a point of view is raised that does not align with their own."

She also claimed that, based on expressions of support she has received, she will continue to represent the "majority" of Canadians in the Senate.

Meanwhile, in the foyer of the House of Commons, New Democrat MPs denounced Beyak's latest statement. Romeo Saganash, a Cree MP from Quebec who attended residential school, repeated his call for her to resign her Senate seat.

"Any person that celebrates genocide, because this was genocide, has no place either in Parliament of the Senate." he said. "Removing her from the committee is not enough. She needs to resign, and the sooner the better.'

How to protect your cellphone data on Parliament Hill

Ryan Tumilty Metro Ottawa

News Parliament Hill and other downtown areas have been the target of cellphone tracking technology should encourage people to use encrypted apps to keep their private information private, experts say.

The CBC reported this week the discovery of three IMSI catcher devices operating in the downtown area. The machines could potentially be used to intercept phone calls and texts.

The devices mimic cellphone towers and essentially fool mobile phones into connecting to them.

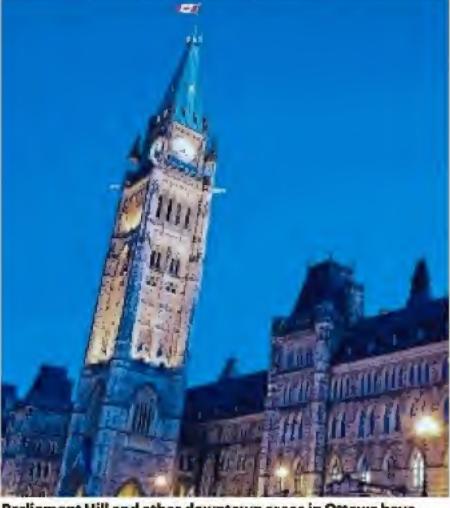

Nathan Freitas, is the director of the Guardian Project, an initiative that offers open-source tools to protect privacy. He's also a fellow at the Berkman Center for Internet & Society at Harvard University. He said the catchers are fairly easy to acquire and can be used to listen to calls, read texts and implant malware on mobile phones.

"For $2,000 anyone can get a laptop-sized device that is a cell tower that will operate as an actual cell tower," he said.

Public Safety Minister Ralph Goodale said this week that the RCMP and CSIS confirmed to him that they were not using the devices. He said the agencies are now investigating.

Freitas suggested that those who want to keep what's on their cellphones away from prying eyes and ears should consider using encrypted messaging apps like Signal and the most recent version of WhatsApp, which he himself uses even for routine communications with his wife.

"Everything we say, whether

He said that, just as information on the internet became more secure over time, the security of mobile communications must tighten up.

"There was a time on the internet when we only encrypted credit cards, and now we encrypt everything," he said. "We need to do that for mobile phones as well."

The government has not issued any specific warnings or instructions to Hill staff, but Scott Bardsley, Goodale's press secretary, said confidential or secret information is not shared over phones.

"It's been publicly known before this incident that cellphones are not secure."

Damage to ice cores a 'shock'

Alex Boyd Metro Edmonton

When glaciologist Martin Sharp walked into one of the freezers custom built for the world's largest collection of Canadian ice cores, it felt like a steam room.

"I think every ice core facility on the planet has the same nightmare — that something like this will happen," he said.

Due to what University of Alberta officials are calling a "freezer failure," the temperature inside the facility rocketed into the 40s on Sunday, up from the -30 C or so required to keep the ancient ice cores frozen. Sharp said.

Now 12.8 per cent of the cores - some of which can't be replaced — have been damaged, less than three months after the U of A took possession of the national collection.

"For this to happen so soon after we moved the ice in, it's a total shock," said Sharp, who is a professor in the department of Earth and Atmospheric Sci-

Ice cores are some of the best records scientists have of ancient climates, and Sharp said the "major hit" was to some of the oldest cores.

The damage includes 15 metres of a sample drilled from Mount Logan, which represented 16.000 years of time.

Another core taken from the Penny Ice cap included ice that would have been part of a large ice sheet covering North America 22,000 years ago.

Still, he said it could have been much worse.

That Pepsi ad doesn't work so well in real life

Andrew Fifield Metro Toronto

Kendall Jenner's rightly and mercilessly mocked Pepsi ad was taken for a real-life spin this week, and it did not go well at all.

A man who identified himself as Carlos Enriquez appeared before city council in Portland, Mass. Wednesday to comment on the protests over treatment of the homeless and the fatal police shooting of 17-year-old Quanice Derrick Hayes.

"I'm a former journalist for the Boston Herald," the man said, which is a claim the Boston Herald has denied. "I'm very surprised at how there's so many people who show up to city council and get angry at you and yell at you," he continued.

Mayor Ted Wheeler cut him off insisting that his comments must be about a towing ordinance currently before council.

But the man stood up and

"What I realized is that the language of resistance has not been properly translated to you, so this is for you," he said before pulling out a can of Pepsi to offer the council members, who appeared visibly shaken.

"Whoa, whoa, not a good move. Not a smart move," Mayor Wheeler said as he accepted the can. The man is not expected to face any charges.

U.S. blasts Syria base with missiles

MILITAR

Sixty Tomahawk missiles launched

The United States has attacked a Syrian air base with roughly 60 cruise missiles in response to a chemical weapons attack it blames on President Bashar Assad.

U.S. officials said the Tomahawk missiles were fired from two warships in the Mediterranean Sea, targeting a governmentcontrolled air base in Syria.

U.S. officials say Syrian government aircraft killed dozens of civilians by using chlorine mixed with a nerve agent, possibly sarin, earlier this week.

The bombing represents President Donald Trump's most dramatic military order since taking office.

"It is in this vital national security interest of the United States to prevent and deter the spread and use of deadly chemical weapons," Trump said in a statement released Thursday night.

President Bashar Assad's government came under mounting international pressure Thursday after a chemical attack in northern Syria, with even key ally Russia saying its support is not unconditional. Turkey, meanwhile, said samples from victims of Tuesday's attack, which killed more than 80 people in the town of Khan Sheikhoun, indicate they were exposed to sarin, a highly toxic nerve agent.

Syria maintains it didn't use chemical weapons, blaming opposition fighters for stockpiling the chemicals. Russia's Defence Ministry said the toxic agents were released when a Syrian airstrike hit a rebel chemical weapons arsenal and munitions factory on the eastern outskirts of Khan Sheikhoun.

The surprise strike marked a reversal for Trump, who warned as a candidate against the U.S. getting pulled into the Syrian civil war, now in its seventh year. But the president appeared moved by the photos of children killed in the chemical attack. "Even beautiful babies were cruelly murdered in this very barbaric attack. No child of God should ever suffer such horror." Trump said in a statement.

ror," Trump said in a statement.
About 60 U.S. Tomahawk missiles targeted an air base in retaliation for a chemical weapons attack that American officials believe Syrian government aircraft launched with a nerve agent, possibly sarin.

The president did not announce the attacks in advance, though he and other national security officials ratcheted up their warnings to the Syrian government throughout the day Thursday. U.S. Secretary of State Rex Tillerson said Assad should no longer have a role in governing the Syrian people.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Speaking earlier Thursday, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau offered little hint about Canada's role in any effort to remove the Syrian president. Yet he expressed horror over this week's attack, which killed more than 80 people.

"This is a war crime and the international community must stand firmly against such things," Trudeau said Thursday. "We condemn in the strongest of terms (these) heinous against civilians, children, by chemical weapons." THE CANADIAN PRESS.

High stakes as Chinese president arrives

President Donald Trump welcomed Chinese President Xi Jinping to his Florida estate Thursday for a high-stakes summit, with the urgent threat of North Korea's nuclear ambitions and tensions over trade on the agenda for the first in-person meeting between the leaders of the world's two largest economies.

Xi and his wife were greeted by the president and first lady Melania Trump at the Mar-a-Lago estate before making their way to dinner. The White House said the location was selected to give the two days of discussions a more relaxed feel, but the meeting kicked off amid suggestions the Trump administration was considering military action against Syria as it deliberated on how to respond to a chemical attack.

Still, Trump appeared lighthearted as he greeted Xi, gesturing and pointing to journalists as they tussled to get a shot of the two leaders together for the first time. Speaking to reporters on Air Force One on his way to the summit, Trump said he thinks China will "want to be stepping up" in trying to deter North Korea's nuclear ambitions.

While Trump would not say what he wants China to do specifically, he suggested there was a link between "terrible" trade agreements the U.S. has made with China and Pyongyang's provocations.

The president has said that if China doesn't exert more pressure on North Korea, the U.S. will act alone. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Trump's many tentacles

When he was elected president, we all knew his adult children were part of the deal.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD From the U.S

When Donald Trump moved to the White House, everyone understood the entire adult Trump clan was moving in, too. The Trumps are conjoined like an octopus, with a patriarchal head and a slew of second-generation tentacles, the entire beast of which is pathologically hungry for money.

It was quaint of Trump, before he took office, to offer up a theatrical presentation of piles of papers and folders to convince Americans and the world that Trump's entire business would be legally excised from him during his presidency.

It was quaint, too, of Ivanka Trump to claim that, after modelling her entire life after her father's predilections and the enlargement of the Trump brand, she'd keep out of his business just as that business became taking on the most powerful position in the world. We knew both were lying, the way we know the sun will come up tomorrow. But now there's proof.

ProPublica revealed this week that Trump's trust documents have been amended to allow him to withdraw money from his businesses any time he likes, with no need to tell anyone. Trump's lawyer responded that Trump has never not been allowed to withdraw money, even though that stipulation was left out of a version of the trust widely scrutinized in late January. The full details of the trust are contained in a document that won't be released, ProPublica reported.

Oversight of Trump's finances, and therefore his conflicts of interest, remains paltry, given that he still hasn't released his tax returns. His bet that enough people wouldn't care whether he's seeking to enrich himself as president seems to continue to pay off, if only partly because the administration is engulfed in so many simultaneous controversies that this most basic one - who is he really working for? — has been obscured.

Ivanka, meanwhile, has decided to become an unpaid employee in the West Wing, an "assistant to the president," with an office and an amorphous goal to influence her father's agenda on "women's empowerment" (as she told CBS). She's going to exert her special powers on an administration hell-bent on destroying the planet, defunding Planned Parenthood, gutting health care, and, simultaneously, making the Trumps richer.

"If being complicit is wanting to be a force for good and to make a positive impact, then I'm complicit," she said, before admitting: "I don't know what it means to be complicit."

Quite. But complicit might as well be the name of our Trumpian octopus. Or, perhaps, nepotism. As Eric Trump pointed out helpfully this week, nepotism is a "factor of life." For evidence, see son-inlaw Jared Kushner, "senior advisor to the president," whose foreign diplomacy efforts have sent him to Iraq and saddled him with a Middle East peace deal. Meanwhile, Trump's sons are busy expanding the hotel business domestically and abroad, for which U.S. taxpayers are forking over millions of dollars in secret service detail costs. When you get the one, you get them all.

Trudeau, cabinet praise former PM Mulroney

Prime Minister Trudeau and his cabinet praised former prime minister Brian Mulroney for giving them useful advice during a closed-door meeting Thursday on the upcoming renegotiation of the North American Free Trade Agreement.

It was part of an unprecedented display of non-partisan co-operation, a healing of old political wounds and unity in the name of managing a new, wildly unpredictable U.S. presidency.

Trudeau was not at the meeting of his cabinet committee on Canada-U.S. relations; he was in New York City for a women's leadership summit. His ministers, however, said Mulroney made a valuable contribution.

Trudeau told reporters he had found Mulroney "thoughtful and helpful" in connecting with the Trump administration.

Facebook launches new education tool for users

Facebook is taking what it calls a "first step" toward helping Canadians tell the difference between fake news and the real thing online.

As of Friday, the social media giant will post a banner on the top of news feeds in Canada and 14 other countries that directs subscribers to a tip sheet that it hopes will educate users so they can decipher what is, or isn't, false or misleading information.

"It's the first time we're doing something of this magnitude," said Kevin Chan, head of public policy at Facebook.

The banner, to be posted "for a few days," is effectively a public service announcement to the media company's 22 million Canadian subscribers that encourages them to click a link to a 10-point "tip sheet" on how to spot scam information.

The top suggestion: "Be skeptical of headlines." Facebook points out that false news stories often carry catchy headlines, sometimes in all caps.

"If shocking claims in the headline sound unbelievable, they probably are," reads the tip sheet.

The project is the result of a collaboration with media literacy agency MediaSmarts to help Canadians filter their news feeds for fake content, a phenomenon that became a growing concern

Facebook says it's still too soon to attach warning labels on socalled "disputed" news stories, like those already being offered to users in the United States, France and the Netherlands.

Facebook users in those countries can flag news stories for false or misleading content by clicking on a grey downward arrow button on the right side of an article.

The tips being offered to Canadian Facebook users were inspired by a recent research project carried out by MediaSmarts, in which young people were asked what kind of strategies they use to authenticate information they find online.

"We found that (young people) were quite likely to try and figure out whether something was legitimate or not when they were doing school work," said Matthew Johnson, the director of education at MediaSmarts, a notfor-profit with a self-prescribed mandate of educating young people about digital media.

ENERGY, FOR EVERYONE, FOREVE Humans love heat. Humans love heat. Humans love light. And clearly, the sun isn't enough for us. So what if we could just make another one — a miniature version of the star that powers all the life on Earth? It sounds crazy. But it's not science fiction. It's called the International Thermonuclear Experimental Reactor (ITER), and it just might hold the cure for our energy woes.

THE PROJECT

ITER is under construction in the south of France, Once completed, optimistically around 2035, it will have two purposes: scientific research and acting as a test-run for the electricity plant of the future fusion reactors. Estimated price tag: $20 billion US; the most expensive scientific instrument ever made, 35 countries are pitching in to the project, which has been plagued by budget problems and delays since its inception in the 1980s.

THE CHEMISTRY

The sun is powered by nuclear fusion: two hydrogen atoms fusing into one helium atom, ITER would replicate the same reaction.

First a powerful electric current gas, transforming it into plasma,

Cranked up to an out-of-this-world temperature of 150,000,000

C, the plasma churns around fast enough that it's possible for two hydrogen. ions, which would normally repel mismatched magnets, to crash into one another and stick.

This produces one atom of helium and one neutral particle called a neutron, as well whole lot of ingly in the form of heat.

The goal for the future would be self-sustaining version of the reactor. The only input needed would be the hydrogen fuel, in two different forms: deuterium (plentiful in seawater) and tritium (scarce but can be made from lithjum, an abundant metal).

The ITER fusion reactor is called a tokamak. The actual reaction will take place within plasma. that is suspended in the air in a donut shape by enormous, negatively-charged magnets. These would keep the negativelycharged helium ions inside, but allow the super-hot neutrons to escape through the machine's walls into water-filled cooling towers. In future fusion plants, this heated water will be used to power turbines and alternators, generating electricity the same way a coal plant does. Except fusion produces four million times more energy than coal.

ENOUGH with the vaccination conversation back in Ontario? - Dean, Toronto Much as I like to blame antivaxxers, sometimes these things just happen. Mumps was never eliminated in Canada, just drastically reduced. Measles was eradicated here in 1998, so all outbreaks since have started with a case from elsewhere. The Toronto case came from India.

And when measles arrives, no matter how well-vaccinated we are, a few people might get infected locally. The average measles patient exposes 12 to

Why are measles and mumps 18 other people, and there's always a chance one of them will be among the few who can't be vaccinated, or for whom the vaccine didn't work.

But that doesn't explain 137 measles cases in Canada in early 2015. Or 776 in Quebec in 2011. That's outrageous, it happened because we're under-vaccinated.

Again: Not entirely antivaxxers' fault. There's a vulnerable group of Canadian adults who never got a needed MMR. booster because they were vaccinated when only one dose was recommended. Some people's shots are out of date or incomplete because of frequent moves or poor record-keeping or laziness.

If we prioritize it as a community, we can reach people who aren't fully vaccinated. But I don't know what to do about people who won? get vaccinated.

It's not 1998 anymore. How many more public health campaigns do you need? Exactly zero anti-vax talking points hold up to scientific scrutiny. Even worse, research shows explaining to anti-

Underlying much anti-vaccine rhetoric is the idea that some vaccine-preventable diseases aren't. serious (they are), or that getting them somehow builds character. Smurfette faces existential crisis

Lovato, Joe Manganiello and Michelle Rodriguez, it trades on its inherent cute factor and nostalgia for much of its appeal. There are some good messages for kids woven in and the animation is relentlessly adorable but is there anything here for anyone over the age of five? In what may be the most adult plotline in Smurf history, it's a hero's journey, a character's search for purpose. It's Joseph Conrad via Smurf Village. Smurfette's Heart of Darkness.

As voiced by Lovato. Smurfette ponders her place in the world. All the other perky pint-sized blue creatures have descriptive names — Clumsy Smurf (Jack McBrayer), Jokey Smurf (Gabriel Iglasias) and Baker Smurf (Gordon Ramsey) - but what exactly, she wonders, is 'ette' supposed to mean?

Smurf aficionados will know she is the only female Smurf, first time other female Smurfs are introduced.

created by wizard Gargamel to sow the seeds of jealousy in Smurf Village. With the help of Papa Smurf she became a beacon of sweetness-and-light and the love interest of Smurfs everywhere.

Voiced by Demi Lovato, Smurfette ponders her

Smurfs: The Lost Village. The new movie is the place in the world in

That's quite a backstory and her quest for purpose is certainly noble, even if her beginnings weren't. The character was first introduced in Franco-Belgian contics magazine Spirou in 1966 as a marketing tool. According to writer Hal Erickson the comely Smurfette was created as a means to "bow to merchandising dictates* and *appeal to little girl toy consumers."

It worked and in the decades that followed Smurfette became the most sought after toy from Smurf Village.

The Smurfs are big business, in addition to this weekend's big screen animated feature, the "three apples tall" characters have been translated into 30 languages (en français: Les Schtroumpfs, in Dutch: De-Smurfen) to create an estimated worth of $4 billion, but not all Smurf related marketing has been successful.

Remember Smurf-Berry Crunch? At the height of 1980s Smurf mania Post Cereal released a sugary breakfast cereal they claimed tasted, "like crunchy Smurf Berries... In berry red and Smurfy blue." To ensure the Smurfiest experience possible Post added little blue corn puff berries laden with food colouring to the mix.

Unfortunately the blue additives weren't easily digestible by the body, leading alarmed parents to report cases of blue and strange coloured poop after breakfast time. According to poopreport.com, "when metabolized in sufficient quantity. the blue dye combines with bile," to form a rainbow effect at potty time. The problem was fixed with the release of Smurf Magic Berries, which contained smurfberries made of yellow corn puffs and marshmallows.

For Jack Black Smurf-Berry Crunch also brings back some bad memories. The Kung Fu Panda actor remembers his second professional gig, a breakfast food commercial. "Being in a Smurf-Berry Crunch cereal ad and being pulled along in a red wagon...?" he says, too humili-ated to finish the sentence. "My stock plummeted at school."

I was a bit too cynical to buy into the North American Smurf craze of the 1980s - they were so popular one writer called them "kiddie cocaine" - but now in 2017 I see them as something other than an hour-and-ahalf advertisement for Smurfs

The new incarnation is a sweet kids movie designed for little ones but with just enough grown-up material to keep parents interested.

Evans' leading lady is the gift that keeps on giving

DRAMA

Ten-year-old Mckenna Grace is a pint-sized pro, star raves

Chris Evans glows around his new leading lady, who makes no secret of her excitement at hanging out with Captain

She gushingly talks up his talents ("He can tap dance!"), yet is just as quick to keep him honest when he says something questionable.

She also travels with a selection of stuffed animals, including a plush seal in a pink dress.

Evans' latest co-star is 10-year-old actress Mckenna Grace. They star together in Gifted, a family drama opening Friday about an unassuming single guy raising his mathprodigy niece, determined not to let her brilliance interfere with her childhood.

Though Evans is an uncle in real life (his eldest sister has three kids, ages 3, 5 and 7), he says he bonded in a different way with Mckenna: as colleagues. Evans and Gifted director Marc Webb (The Amazing Spider-Man) saw dozens of girls read for the role, and Mckenna stood out with her childlike charm yet old-soul maturity.

"She might as well have an apartment," he said. "I'm telling you, I've met lesser pros in adults."

The 10-year-old actress also a regular on TV's Designated Survivor - is the kind of professional who asks if she can bring her stuffed seal along while promoting her new film. She also has a plush cat with her at this interview, noting she's allergic to real cats.

Mckenna says she isn't a math whiz like her character in Gifted. Instead, she feels like she's gifted with a great family and amazing lifestyle.

"This experience is so wonderful and it makes me so thankful for my life. I'm gifted that I have my family here to support me and that I'm here right now with Chris," she said, adding, "Well, every job could be my last, you know?"

As for Evans' gifts? Mckenna's got that covered, too.

"He has lots of secret talents," she said. "He can tap dance! Though he still has not tap danced for me."

Evans sheepishly admits that yes, he does tap dance.

Looking at Mckenna warmly, he added: "She couldn't actually hear all of their songs because some of their songs have bad words."

Mckenna said she and her dad also love watching Marvel movies together, so she already knew about Captain America before working with Evans.

Ann Margret hangs with the 'old boys'

LEADING LADIES

Silver screen legend joins senior stars in Going in Style

When screen legend Ann-Margret matched moves and wiles with "the boys" early in her 56-year career, it was with the study likes of Elvis Presley (Viva Las Vegas) and Steve McQueen (The Cincinnati Kid).

Lately, however, when Ann-Margret speaks of "the boys," she's happily referring to famous men of a certain age — a certainly much older age than before. Guys like Michael Caine, 84, Alan Arkin, 83, and Morgan Freeman, 79, who she stars opposite in Zach Braff's codger caper comedy remake Going in Style, which arrives in theatres Friday.

She had previously teamed with senior superstars Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau, both now deceased, for the 1993 comedy hit Grumpy Old Men and its sequel Grumpier Old Men in '95.

And she's been married for the past half-century to Roger Smith, star of the hit 1950s-60s TV detective series 77 Sunset Strip. They'll celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary next month.

So Ann-Margret certainly knew what she was getting into with Going in Style, in which she plays the love interest for one of the elder gents:

You and "the boys" seem to be having a lot of fun in Going in Style. Maybe remakes aren't so bad if you enjoy making them?

This is great! I keep thinking of Grumpy Old Men and the wonderful warm feeling that I had with Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau. And I've been with a "grumpy old man" (Smith) for 53 years. On May 8, we'll have been married for 50 years. And you know, (marriage) just gets better and better, doesn't it? You can't explain that to anybody unless they have been married that long.

You have another half-century anniversary to mark this year: 1967 was the year you first headlined your own show in Las Vegas.

Omigod, is it really? Yes, you're right, and I was headlining!

We can't talk about Vegas without mentioning Viva Las Vegas from 1964, in which you were memorably paired with Elvis. This year marks the 40th anniversary of his death. Do you have any thoughts to share?

He was one of the most naturally talented men I've ever met. And we were friends for 15 years.

Here's another blast from your past: Did you see the episode of Mad Men where your singing in the musical comedy Bye Bye Birdie becomes part of the show's plot?

Do you know what happened? My daughter-in-law called me and she said, "Oh, turn on the TV! They're talking about you!" I turned it on, and Roger and I were watching it, and we got tears in our eyes. Because of how sweet it was. It's so dear. I was very touched.

How have making movies changed for you over the years?

It's always changing. What can I say about this? All I can say is what has happened to me. All my life I knew I wanted to be a performer, even when I was four years old in Sweden, living in a little village with 98 people. That's what I wanted, but I didn't speak a word of English until we came to America. But I always knew I wanted to entertain people. I wanted to make them feel something.

And you know what I love about today? When I did a movie with Frank Capra (her first film, A Pocketful of Miracles, 1961), playing the daughter of Bette Davis, did you know there were just three women behind the camera? Hairdresser, make-up girl and wardrobe girl. And for Going in Style, there were maybe 25-30 women behind the camera. It's incredible, and I'm so thrilled for them. It's progress, but we just all have to fight for it.

Inspiration behind the artistry of David Lynch

DOCUMENTARY

Doc dives deep on influences that have driven master director

Steve Gow For Metro Canada,

When the reboot of Twin Peaks premieres on Showtime next month, it'll mark a quarter of a century since David Lynch became a household name.

Sure, the talented creator behind the hit series had already established himself with such art-house hits as Eraserhead and Blue Velvet but Peaks exposed a mainstream audience to the surrealist genius.

"Sometimes you forget what a master he is," said filmmaker Jon Nguyen. "I think it's both the gift that he was born with and the nurturing that he received."

And Nguyen should know. After spending three years hanging around Lynch at his Hollywood home, Nguyen has deconstructed the director in David Lynch: The Art Life — a new documentary that aims to enlighten audiences to the influences that shaped the

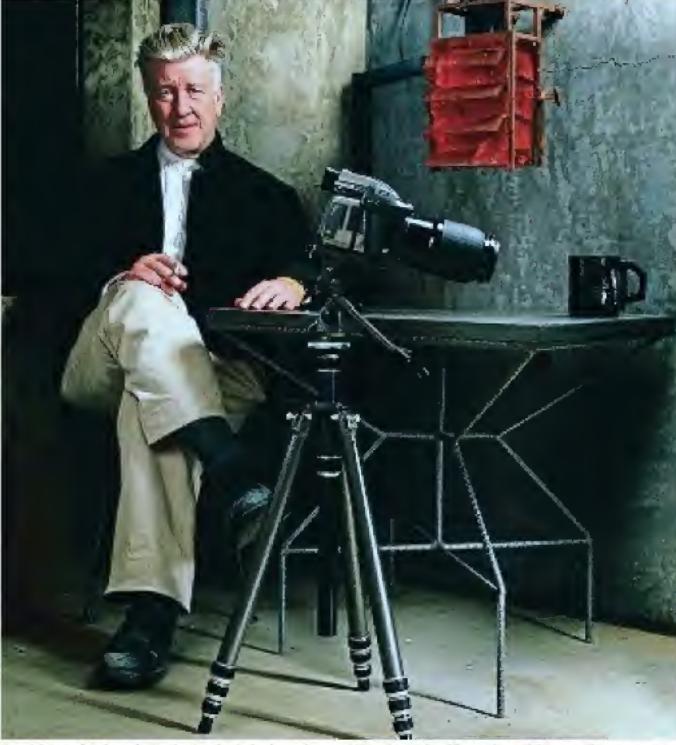

"A lot of people go 'you don't really talk about his movies in the film," said Nguyen. "But what they don't understand was our goal, the whole time, was to talk about his films just in a more obtuse way."

Female pro-wrestling has come a long way since it was a gimmicky '90s novelty that featured women in bikinis whacking each other in pillow-fight matches.

With a recent metamorphosis in philosophy and intent, the sport has been improving the image of female wrestling with less-sexualized stunts and higher profiles. Now, it's even getting a modern makeover in pop culture.

In February, Dwayne Johnson announced he's producing a biopic about WWE superstar Paige while Orange Is New Black creator Jenji Kohan debuts a hotly-anticipated women wrestling Netflix series called Glow in June.

First however, the comedy Chokeslam is about to enter the ring, hitting theatres across Canada this weekend as it gets its wide release.

"Something so mainstream like a movie is huge because it's going to put eyes on an industry that a lot of people didn't know about," said B.C.-born pro-wrestler Chelsea Green, who plays a small role in the film. "It's awesome to see everybody start to turn and become women wrestling fans rather than see women as kind of side pieces."

In Chokeslam, helmed by Calgary director Robert Cuffley, female wrestling certainly isn't treated as a "side piece."

The story is about a waning wrestling star (played by Amanda Crew) reuniting with an unlikely high school sweetheart. The film doesn't just paint the pugilist in a positive light, it aims to dodge the gimmickry that has previously saddled the female fight game.

"They did a good job when they wrote the character of not doing that," admitted Crew. Not a lifelong wrestling fan herself, the 30-year-old star of HBO's Silicon Valley researched the role and uncovered that life beyond the mat deserves a

"By the time I was in that ring in that outfit, I was surprised at how I wasn't insecure at all," admitted Crew, who spent many hours training for the movie which was shot in Lumsden and Regina, Sask. in late 2015.

"I was proud of myself, proud of my body, of what I could do and I felt the most empowered I've ever felt."

The Game is Changing

"It used to be bra and panty matches and evening gown matches and things like that and it's just not anymore," admits Chelsea Green (pictured right with Chokeslam director Robert Cuffley) about women wrestling's image. "People are starting to realize that slowly."

The Empowerment of Pain

"Its hard to explain if you haven't done it," said Green of her love of wrestling, "But the mix of performing with playing a sport; with entertaining everyone — there's so many aspects to it that all wrestlers relate to. That's what they love."

Malick's distant melody hits all the wrong notes

A little bit more about some other movies that are being released this weekend

Song to Song — (Starring Ryan Gosling, Rooney Mara, Michael Fassbender, Natalie Portman and Cate Blanchett; directed by Terrence Malick; 129 minutes; 14A) Terrence Malick's latest film isn't so much a movie as it is a freeform collection of whispers and beseeching looks.

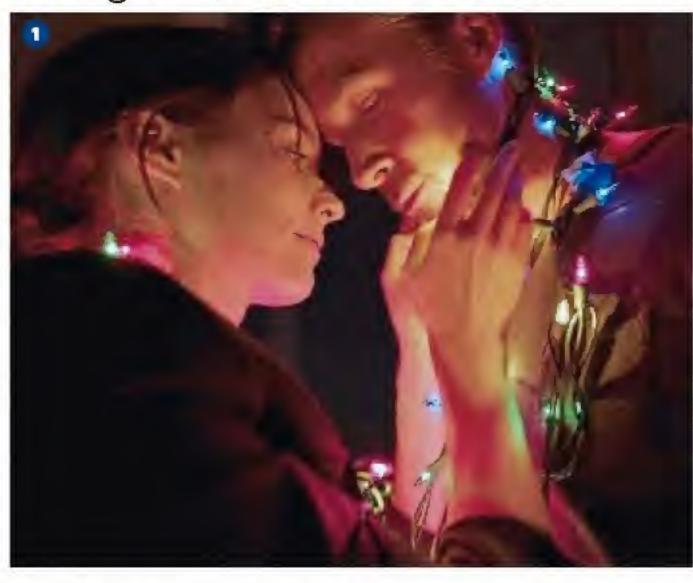

The Texas auteur's long-held disregard for storytelling basics and conventional cinematic structure seemed inspired in his Palme d'Or-winning The Tree of Life in 2011, but his post-Cannes output makes indifference approach arrogance.

Song to Song is loosely based on the music scene in Malick's vibrant home city of Austin, a topic and locale that by rights should offer some kind of artistic rejuvenation after the creative wheelspinning of To the Wonder, Voyage of Time and Knight of Cups.

No such luck, Bereft of ideas and anything resembling a script, Malick sets loose his A-list cast including Ryan Gosling, Rooney Mara, Michael Fassbender, Natalie Portman and Cate Blanchett to wander listlessly amidst couplings and uncouplings that are more tiresome than tragic.

Musical pursuits become incidental to the proceedings: Who'd have guessed that Del Shannon's 1961 pop hit Runaway would be Malick's sonic muse?

He never seems happier than when his gaze — and that of lenser Emmanuel Lubezki at a flock of seagulls, while the soundtrack exults in orchestral appreciation.

Song to Song becomes a test of who can best handle Malick's indifferent direction: Fassbender hams it up Zepplinesque style; Portman and Blanchett push back against badgirl stereotypes; Gosling treads water and Mara simply looks lost.

Real musicians like Iggy Pop, John Lydon, Lykke Li and Patti Smith enter and exit the frame, with Smith offering the film's only genuine emotion as she lovingly remembers her late husband Fred (Sonic) Smith, guitarist for the MC5.

it was beautiful . . . I thought I would be with him for the rest of my life," Smith says.

Listening with silent envy is Mara's unhappy character Faye, a budding singer-songwriter caught in a love triangle between Fassbender's scheming producer Cook and Gosling's pretty vacant songwriter BV.

"I was desperate to feel something real," Faye whispers in voiceover about her own life. Viewers of Song to Song can nod in weary agreement.

@ Giants of Africa— (Directed by Hubert Davis; 77 minutes) Giants of Africa is the program, based on the NBA's Basketball Without Borders, which offers training and life lessons to would-be players in four African countries.

It's the brainchild of Nigerian-born Masai Ujiri, a former player and scout, and the first African president of an NBA team. the Toronto Raptors.

The program, started in 2003, follows four recent training camps and the struggles and successes of youth from varied backgrounds along with coaches and Ujiri himself, a mentor who throws himself into his work with obvious passion.

The film is inspirational in a nonchalant sort of way. The program has yet to produce a NBA star, but it has filled scores of young men with hope while teaching them leadership skills, the need to respect others especially women - and to fight endemic corruption in their respective home countries.

The low-key style and the simplicity of its storytelling make the film all the more powerful. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Wearing black shades, his dreads in a ponytail, the pioneering rapper rushed off the cooking stage and emerged 20 minutes later at a nearby beachside DJ booth, also part of the recent South Beach Wine & Food Festival, spinning tunes, including many of his own, while a stagehand passed out joints to the sweaty, enthusiastic crowd.

"Music, like food, has no language barriers. When people hear music or eat tasty food, all of a sudden we have something in common," he said.

Some artists were busy in the kitchen long before they started making music.

Rapper Flava Flav grew up cooking in his family's soul food diner. Chef's travel show offers a flavour of wild and wonderful Straddling a huge alligator during filming of the culinary travel show Dead Set on Life was something Matty Matheson did on the spur of the moment.

The Toronto chef was on a guided gator hunt in the Florida Everglades when the group hauled in the lengthy reptile.

"When we were pulling that 12-foot gator out of the water the guys were just, like, 'Jump on it.' I was, like, 'OK," he says.

"I'm pretty much 300 pounds, (but) it's a 12-foot. If it wanted to move ...'

Afterward, the tattooed Matheson continues, "I got up and realized what happened. I was in the moment and when I got off the gator I was kind of frazzled a bit. 'What did I just do?"

For the executive chef of Parts & Labour restaurant in Toronto, it's all about the adrenalin rush.

During the eight episodes of the third season of Dead Set on Life, which kicked off Thursday on Vice, Matheson also travels to Los Angeles, Las Vegas, Venice Beach, Calif., Australia, New Zealand, Thunder Bay, Ont., and Iceland.

"Out of all of those each one just had their moments,"

"In Thunder Bay we did a sauna with some Finnish people and we did a frozen lake plunge. The night before I was, like, should we have EMS there? We're jumping in a frozen lake. I've never done it before. Is my heart going to stop?

"We made a last-minute decision to bring EMS on site for it and that was super funny. That was a really big adrenaline rush."

S-Town is hosted by Brian Reed (top right with headphones), who's normally This American Life's senior producer. He's been working on this story for more than three years. INSTAGRAM

life@metronews.ca

S-Town, the new blockbuster podcast from the team behind Serial, begins with the spectre of murder.

From the first twang of main subject John B. McLemore's Alabama accent — "Some'ns happ'ned!" — the listener might be inclined to dub S-Town a kind of Serial: Deep South.

The podcast, narrated by longtime This American Life producer Brian Reed, was inspired by an email sent by ancient-clock restorer John B. Mc-Lemore from Woodstock, Alabama. Woodstock is an unassuming small town outside of Birmingham in Bibb County, but McLemore prefers to call it "S-t Town," hence the podcast title:

Here are seven reasons to listen to the new seven-part podcast, which has already been downloaded more than 16 million times since March 28, faster than any podcast ever.

1. John B. McLemore's brilliant rants

"I've about had enough of S-t Town and the things that goes on," he tells Reed in episode one. And he's just getting started. Much of S-Town is made up of phone calls where McLemore goes off on fascinating tangents about climate change, Darfur, acid reflux, Facebook and his S-t Town.

2. To gape at the crudeness of Trump's America

McLemore writes to Reed to decry murder, child molestation and police corruption in Woodstock and requesting the investigative rigour of the This American Life team. When Reed visits the backroom of a local tattoo parlour to investigate a murder, the town's prejudice is as enlightening as it is disturbing.

3. You'll learn more than you thought you wanted to about horology

That's the study of time and clock-making — McLemore's trade. The podcast opens with a description of a horologist's mazelike task of fixing a broken ancient clock. The intricate machines become a metaphor for life through McLemore's eyes. At one point, he quotes from a sundial inscription: "Life is tedious and brief."

4. You'd spend time on John B.'s property too When Reed makes his way to S-t Town and gets to know McLemore, he learns the man is in his late forties and lives with his elderly mother on a 128-acre property, where he takes in stray dogs and prunes an elaborate hedge maze, when he's not fixing clocks or obsessively researching climate change. After finishing S-Town, you'll want to give the maze a go.

5. It's a murder mystery
McLemore had heard that a kid ended up dead in a fight and that someone has been going around Woodstock
bragging about the murder.
That's just the spark that sets off the greater story that's difficult to define and becomes much more than a

6. It's a treasure hunt southern whodunit.

When a central character brags of being "unbanked," you'll wonder if you should start converting all your assets into gold and wrap it up in a towel in the freezer before cutting out the gold-diggers in your life.

7. S-Town is not what you think it is

It's not really a true-crime podcast, though it mimics much of Serial's twisty-turny structure. But it's still a riveting investigation, if not as deeply into murder as it first appears, then into the life of one Alabama man. At times S-Town goes so deep that some have accused Reed and his team of invasiveness.

If they go too far, it's because there's a lot to mine from a man as fascinating as Mc-Lemore, the self-proclaimed black sheep in the community that he so despises but won't leave.

Reading Road map for new kind of feminism

BOOKS

Actress Gillian Anderson and close friend lay it all on the line

The actor Gillian Anderson is best known for her role as FBI Special Agent Dana Scully, a skeptical, fearless foil to alien abduction conspiracist Fox Mulder on the '90s hit series The X-Files.

Her character is believed to have inspired young women to enter the fields of science, medicine and law enforcement. She demanded a salary equal to costar David Duchovny and now plays sexually empowered and dogged detective Stella Gibson on BBC series The Fall.

So it shouldn't be much of a surprise she has put together a feminist self-help book with co-author and longtime friend Jennifer Nadel, a journalist and lawyer in the U.K.

We: A Manifesto for Women Everywhere was released last month as road map to living a more centred, authentic life. The main message is this: women need to get real about who they really are, whether they're willing to accept their current circumstances and if not, how to empower themselves to change things.

Anderson and Nadel spoke about self-care, activism, fighting Hollywood stereotypes and how to find time to meditate.

Can you describe your friendship?

IN: We have children the same age and tried to persuade them to become friends. They sat in stony silence, but we couldn't stop talking. We're both seekers and have struggled with many of the same issues and tried many of the same spiritual and emotional solutions. Ten years into the friendship, Gillian asked whether I'd be open to talking about a book idea she'd had. Her idea chimed perfectly with a desire I'd had to write about a new kind of feminism.

There is a lot of personal information. Can you explain why you decided to openly discuss so much?

GA: The first principle in our book is honesty because it is an essential part of any path to change, personal or societal. First, one must fully understand the reality of a situation. We realized that it would be unfair to ask readers to get honest about themselves and their own lives without first doing so ourselves.

Do you think self-care is particularly important during this social moment?

GA: If we don't practise selfcare, then often, our unruly or egoic selves push to the foreground to run the show and be heard. When we practise self-compassion, we are more likely to be compassionate towards others, even those we don't agree with. JN: All of us are called to activism of one sort or another at this time in history. It's no longer an optional choice.

There's a lot of discussion about idealized beauty. Yet Hollywood and pop culture still demand these things. How do you navigate that? GA: Hollywood and pop culture are not where most of us live. The more we start to reject those images and demand realistic representation, the more empowered we will feel. But it does first start with accepting ourselves as we are. Really, truly embracing ourselves and refusing to attempt to conform.

How do you find the time, logistically, to practise meditation - and the other essential practices - when life gets heetie?

GA: Life is always hectic. But there are tools in the book for finding ways to eek out time for oneself regardless. That can be starting with just two minutes of meditation, or making hard rules about the amount of sleep one gets, or replacing negative messages with positive ones. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Imagining the war-torn West of 2075

APOCALYPSE FICTION

Journalist riffs off real-life uprisings in raw debut novel

Sue Carter For Metro Canada

Even before he became a reporter, El Akkad — who was born in Cairo, grew up in Qatar, moved to Canada, and now lives with his family in a remote area outside of Portland, Ore. - observed human universality from a "triple outsider's" perspective.

"We're not fundamentally different," he says. "It's something I thought about a lot because I come from one part of the world and I live in another. The culture of my family is of one culture and the culture that I consume most often is another."

El Akkad's powerful debut novel, American War, examines the drive for revenge through the life Sara T. Chestnut, or Sarat, named after Civil War diarist Mary Chesnut and Mary Surratt, who was hanged for her part in the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

The novel's raw, apocalyptic story, which touches on such contemporary fears as terrorism, global warming, and warring ideologies, follows the lively tenacious girl as she is slowly transformed into a broken, hatred-filled husk of a person after enduring relentless tragedies and torture.

Set near the beginning of the American Civil War in 2075, Sarat's Louisiana family is forced into a refugee camp where she is recruited into an underground militia resistance effort, propelling a series of events that will have a horrific impact on the entire country.

Although American War takes place nearly 60 years into a future where the skies are filled with drones, El Akkad doesn't consider the novel science fiction.

He says he needed time for the "world to marinate," so it's set just far enough away to have the rising sea levels eat up the country's coasts, and world power to shift from the West to the Bouazizi Empire, a fictitious union of former colonized Arabic countries.

Many of the landmarks in American War were also inspired by El Akkad's reporting experiences. The tents in Camp Patience, where the Chestnut family lives for years, is based on a media habitat in Guantánamo Bay, with the physical layout modelled after the NATO airfield in Kandahar. A scene with a polio-vaccination doctor borrows from another experience, when El Akkad toured with a UN vaccination team in Kandahar. An assignment about land loss established the Chestnuts' home in Louisiana.

But El Akkad says Sarat appeared to him as a fully formed character all her own, albeit one that drew on his own feelings of impermanence and being unanchored.

"She's this stubbornly curious human being who has those qualities turned against her," says El Akkad, who doesn't expect that Sarat will, or should draw sympathy.

"I don't want you to apologize for her. I don't think she's a good human being at the end of it. But what I hope people take away is that you don't have to get on someone's side to understand why they do the things they do. I don't like living in this 'you're either with us or against us' world."

Sue Carter is the editor at Quill & Quire magazine.

Don Rickles insulted his way into people's hearts

IN MEMORIAM

Comedian, actor dies of kidney failure, he was 90

Don Rickles, the big-mouthed, bald-headed "Mr. Warmth" whose verbal assaults endeared him to audiences and peers and made him the acknowledged grandmaster of insult comedy, died Thursday. He was 90.

Rickles, who would have been 91 on May 8, suffered kidney failure and died Thursday morning at his home, said Paul Shefrin, his longtime publicist and friend.

For more than half a century, Rickles headlined casinos and nightclubs from Las Vegas to Atlantic City. New Jersey, and livened up late-night talk shows. No one was exempt from Rickles' insults, not fans or presidents or such fellow celebrities as Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin and Johnny Carson.

Even volatile Sinatra let Rickles have his comedic way with him.

"Hey, Frank, make yourself at home. Hit somebody," Rickles snapped at the singer attending his show. Sinatra laughed.

Despite jokes that from other comics might have inspired boycotts, he was one of the most beloved people in show business, idolized by everyone from Joan Rivers and Louis CK to Chris Rock and Sarah Silverman.

Billy Crystal tweeted simply, "A giant loss."

"We lost a great one, fast furious brilliant for decades the definition of genius," Sandra Bernhard said on Twitter. Some reaction to Rickles' death matched his style. "In lieu of flowers, Don Rickles' family has requested that people drop their pants and fire a rocket," Patton Oswald tweeted.

James Caan once said that Rickles helped inspire the blustering Sonny Corleone of The Godfather. An HBO special was directed by John Landis of Animal House fame and included tributes from Clint Eastwood, Sidney Poitier and Robert De Niro.

Carl Reiner would say he knew he had made it in Hollywood when Rickles made fun of him.

Rickles patented a confrontational style that stand-up performers still emulate, but one that kept him on the right side of trouble. He emerged in the late 1950s, a time when comics such as Lenny Bruce and Mort Sahl were taking greater risks, becoming more politicized and more introspective.

Rickles managed to shock his audiences without cutting social commentary or truly personal self-criticism. He operated under a code as old the Borscht Belt: Go far—ethnic jokes, sex jokes, ribbing Carson for his many marriages—but make sure everyone knows it's for fun.

YouTube TV: nifty but has drawbacks

YouTube TV, Google's new streaming package of about 40 television channels, is the tech industry's latest bid to get cable shunning millennials to pay for live TV over the internet. It offers intriguing advantages over rivals, but it remains hobbled by a limited channel selection.

Don't confuse the YouTube service, which debuts Wednesday, with Netflix, Amazon Prime and other streaming offerings. Like similar efforts from Sony, Dish and AT&T's DirecTV, YouTube TV primarily aims to let you channel surf over the internet, not to stream from an online library of shows and movies. So these internet-cable services can offer live programming, especially sports.

But they also come with some serious drawbacks. While these services are typically cheaper than traditional cable or satellite services, people haven't been signing up in droves. Google is targeting viewers who have never subscribed to cable or satellite TV and are just as happy to get all their video from the internet, getting them to cough up $35 a month could be a hard sell.

Google aims to lure subscribers with more sophisticated program search, personalized recommendations and a more fully featured online DVR than rival services offer. But it still faces limitations. For instance, features staples such as ESPN and major broadcast networks, but lacks key networks such as PBS, CNN and Comedy Central. And it will initially be only available in a handful of major U.S. cities because media rights are still stuck in the 20th century.

One big plus: YouTube's unlimited DVR will store recordings for nine months, long enough for entire seasons of network shows.

Netflix looks to thumbs as star ratings fade away

Simpler system to assist viewer feedback, show suggestions

Netflix's video-streaming service is officially scrapping its familiar star-rating system, hoping to make it easier for its 94 million subscribers to signal whether they liked a movie or TV show.

The service is compressing its familiar one-to-five star system into a simpler choice of thumbs-up or thumbs-down. The change, first discussed by a Netflix official last month and officially unveiled on Wednesday, is aimed at soliciting more viewer feedback and helping the service make better program recommendations.

Netflix believes its star system has been confusing to many people. The five stars allowed subscribers to tell Netflix whether they "hated," "didn't like," "liked," "really liked" or "loved" a particular video.

That was straightforward enough. But the company found that too many subscribers thought the star ratings Netflix posted for videos they hadn't rated reflected the average of all user responses. In actuality, those ratings were personalized predictions based on Netflix analysis of a user's viewing history and past ratings.

Instead, Netflix will now display a percentage designed to predict how much each subscriber will enjoy a given show or movie. The number, similar to compatibility predictions on online dating services, will also be drawn from viewing patterns and past ratings, including those previously entered into the star

Although change invariably irks some people, Netflix thinks relatively few of its subscribers will give the streaming service a thumbs-down for abandoning the star system. That's because the all-thumbs format generated three times more viewer ratings than the star system during tests conducted with millions of subscribers over the past year, according to Cameron Johnson, Netflix's director of product innovation.

"It's easy to see why," Johnson said. "They perceive it as a way to get better suggestions on Netflix, which is something they care about because it helps them find something great to watch really quickly."

Recommending videos is important to Netflix because it wants to limit the odds that subscribers become bored and cancel. The Los Gatos, California, company needs to keep its subscriber numbers growing to keep investors happy and support its stock price, which has been hovering near its record highs.

Netflix also need rising subscriber revenue to help pay its bills. It plans to spend about $6 billion on original programming this year.

The stars are fading away after a decade on Netflix's streaming service, although they'll remain on the company's DVD-by-mail program, where they have been around for 17 years. But Netflix's DVD business has dwindled to 4 million subscribers, and the company no longer spends money promoting that side of its business. THE ASSOCIATE PRESS.

GOLF

Northern Ireland's idilyc courses are a golfer's dream

Brian Kendall For Metro Canada

"Don't look up until you hear the ball dancing in the cup," my caddy whispered. "Make this and it'll be a fine thing to remember all your days."

My putt for an eagle three at the par-five ninth hole at Royal Portrush Golf Club was the most thrilling moment of a week-long tour of Northern Ireland's famous links courses, including Royal County Down, Portstewart and Ardglass.

Setting up nervously over my ball, I could almost feel the crash of the Atlantic against the towering sand cliffs that define this ruggedly beautiful and windblown stretch of coastline. Now largely free of the Troubles that once frightened tourists away, Northern Ireland is drawing record numbers of golfers to its more than 90 courses.

Anticipation is already building for the 2019 Open Championship at Royal Portrush, which will be the first Open hosted by the British province since Englishman Max Faulkner lifted the Claret Jug at this same course in 1951. As many as 200,000 visitors are expected at the biggest sporting event to ever be staged here in terms of prestige and global media

With the Irish Open set for summer and the Open Championship coming in 2019, Northern Ireland is one of the hottest destinations in golf. Left: Royal Portrush is home to one of the most challenging links courses in the world. Right: Portstewart Golf Club was founded in 1894 and redesigned in the 1920's. CONTRIBUTED exposure

And this summer Rory Mcllroy will return to his native soil to defend his title at the European Tour's Dubai Duty Free Irish Open. Played at Portstewart Golf Club July 6-9, the tournament will showcase a magnificent — though sometimes undersated — north coast links that twists through massive sand dunes and alongside a tranquil estuary of the River Bann. Outside Belfast, Northern Ireland is almost all green and rolling countryside, with farms and villages linked by a spidery network of roads. Establish a base and you can reach almost any golf course within a couple of hours.

Absolutely not to be missed is Royal County Down, the iconic Old Tom Morris design set on a long sweep of Dundrum Bay, an hour's drive down the Irish Sea coastline from Belfast. Vast swathes of gorse and heather line fairways that tumble through sand hills, while tussock-faced bunkers defend approach shots to subtly contoured greens.

Conveniently nearby is Ardglass Golf Club — a course I love more with each visit. Skirting the Irish Sea, Ardglass begins and ends in the middle of a fishing village once occupied by Vikings. Looming over this idyllic setting is the world's oldest clubhouse, an imposing if slightly threadbare castle-like structure built in the 14th century.

Despite the stiff competition, it's 2019 Open host Royal Portrush that has naturally grabbed most of the attention. Two new holes are being built to accommodate huge tournament grandstands on a links that spills down a hillside to seaside cliffs in the north coast town of Portrush.

Royal Portrush's most famous hole is the 14th, Calamity Corner, a par three demanding a heroic carry to a cliff-top green.

But the defining moment of my trip came at the ninth, where not even three jittery putts that turned an eagle into a routine par could spoil a day of golf on one of the world's outstanding links.

A superior tour of the greatest lake

Oceanic vistas and stunning scenery on 2,000 km tour

It might not have the cachet of California's Highway 101, of South Africa's Garden Route or of the Rockies. Yet a voyage around the world's largest freshwater lake, the big sea they once called Gichigami, reveals a sublime and in-your-face spectacular wonderland unrivalled anywhere.

The 2,000-kilometre Circle Tour is to be savoured like a Group of Seven painting the area north of Lake Superior inspired.

"It's like every piece of shoreline is different and unique," says Dan Bevilacqua, executive director of Superior Country. "It goes for the communities as well."

There are the Ontario city splendours of Sault Ste. Marie or Blues Fest in Thunder Bay. At its most westerly point, travel Bob Dylan Way through a charming Duluth, Minn., near where the famed poet-singer hails.

In between, find out where a cub named Winniethe-Pooh began a long journey to literary fame, check out the motel where pianist Glenn Gould would get away from it all, or take in the striking monument where a cancer-stricken Terry Fox gave up his one-legged trans-Canada run.

Stop and admire the revamped main street of Terrace Bay, or on the south shore — which Americans call the north shore — meander through picturesque Marquette or breeze past Christmas on Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

Mostly, however, it's about a lake that splits its sparkling waters between Canada and the United States. Indeed, as the largest of the Great Lakes, Superior offers seemingly boundless shoreline—log-strewn beaches, gentle river mouths, pristine sunbathing sands, rock cliffs and waterfall trails—all with oceanic vistas. In fact, it would be easy to confuse the greatest of the lakes for an ocean were it not for glass-clear water that on serene summer days makes for a bracing, salt-free swim.

At other time that water can turn ferocious — with steely-grey waves two or three storeys high. Moodiness and power both awesome and breath-taking. Stop and look out over where the Edmund Fitzgerald sank in a November gale in 1975 just a few kilometres from safety — a tragedy immortalized in song by Canadian singer-songwriting legend Gordon Lightfoot.

Getting a sense of scale is hard. At its longest, Lake Superior stretches some 560 kilometres as the eagle flies, abutting one province and three states. By some counts, if you poured out its water, it would flood the entire continents of North and South America to a depth of 30 centimetres. The shoreline of twists and turns that runs to about 2,780 kilometres offers stunning views and unsurpassed magnificence — not to mention stupendous motorcycling or driving territory for the enthusiast.

Everywhere there are surprises, some steeped in indigenous history that traces back as far as 10,000 years, such as the Ojibwa pictographs at Agawa Rock. There is the delight of Old Woman Bay, where river meets lake, or places whose very names are the lure: Rabbit Blanket Lake, Pinguisibi Falls or Kakabeka Falls, nicknamed Niagara of the North.

Hunt or fish. Walk or cycle trails. Camp out in well-equipped provincial or federal parks, or stop at hotels, motels, inns or lodges along the way. But mostly, says Bevilacqua, talk to locals for their advice on what secret treasures their communities offer.

"There's lots of little hidden gems," says Bevilacqua, whose Superior Country not-for-profit puts out a Circle Tour guide full of ideas. This year, Superior Country has revived a "passport" program for both lake and auto travellers. Visitors can collect stamps along the way and, ultimately, a certificate of completion if they get all the way around.

ANNIVERSARY

Minneapolis-area Prince pilgrimage

Prince's hometown of Minneapolis offers many places where fans can pay homage on the anniversary of his death, from his favourite record store to the humble house used in his Oscarwinning Purple Rain film.

Paisley Park, his massive, gleaming white studio and performance complex, was turned into a museum soon after his death. A "celebration" planned there for April 20-23 with panel discussions, concerts and tours is mostly sold out. But there's plenty more to see.

Paisley Park

Aa must, even if it's just a driveby to see the sprawling place rise up from the flatlands in Chanhassen, an easy drive from downtown Minneapolis. Guided tours include rooms where Prince created some of his biggest hits. The museum is a work in progress, with a recently added room displaying costumes and other artifacts from his Lovesexy album and tour. Much has been made of Prince's Paisley Park-shaped ura. It was moved from the main atrium at the family's request to a frosted high-walled fixture above a little kitchen where he sometimes watched TV.

Store Day. The store opened in 1968, but it remains an indie mecca for audiophiles and drew grieving fans when Prince died.

First Avenue & 7th St. Entry

This downtown club in a former Greyhound bus depot remains a mecca for Prince fans and an indie rock hot spot. There are guided tours. A separate entrance and fee gets you inside the club where Prince played several times, including his first time in 1981 when it was called Sam's and in 1983 when he unveiled a longer version of his ballad Purple Rain.

Purple Rain house

Prince's famous Purple House

residence in the woods of Lake Riley in Chanhassen was bulldozed more than a decade ago, but the simple Purple Rain home used in the movie stands, empty and a bit worse for wear.

Head to 3420 Snelling Ave. in Minneapolis' Longfellow neighbourhood for a look at the outside. Prince never lived here but his character The Kid came of age within its walls in the 1984 film. Some purple flowers were tucked into the mailbox on a recent visit.

Other Prince-related houses are around, as are old schools, studios where he recorded and other hangouts. The city's visitor's bureau has compiled a map. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPOTS TO WINE AND DINE ON CALIFORNIA'S COAST

Local seafood, farm-fresh produce, award-wining wine and delicious craft beer — it's all here. There are thousands of places to drink and dine at along California's Central Coast. Here are a few that left an impression. DANIEL OTIS/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Carmel-by-the-Sea

Cultura Comida y Bebida (culturacarmel.com) is one of the newest restaurants in this sleepy, seaside town. Offering an artistic tapas-style twist on Mexican classics in a small and swanky space, must-tries include the "Cultura Mole," which is crammed full of smoked pork and hunks of orange, and the Monterey Red Abalone "Relleno Style," which is delicately cooked in butter, garlic and dried chili. If you love wine, the Carmel Wine Walk by-the-Sea offers a wine-tasting passport that gets you flights in nine different tasting rooms. You can order yours online or pick one up at Carmel-by-the-Sea's visitor centre.

🙆 Los Agaves in Santa Barbara

Don't let the thronged takeout counter or sparse and homely decor turn you away — this restaurant is so good it deserves its own mention. Cooking up Mexican fare with local ingredients, Los Agaves (los-agaves.com) is known for dishes like its delectably gooey Queso Fundido appetizer, fresh fish and shrimp-filled Agaves Enchiladas and simply sweet flan for dessert. Even the creamy housemade mango dressing that comes with its side salad is delicious. With two locations in Santa Barbara and one in nearby Goleta, you have no excuse to skip this understated gem.

San Luis Obispo

SLO Brew (slobrew.com) is a massive brewpub with a menu that leans on savoury appetizers, hulking salads, big burgers and pizzas topped with greens. It also has nearly a dozen homemade beers on tap and it regularly hosts live bands. If you're more of a cocktail person, Sidecar Cocktail Co. (sidecarcocktail.company) has an impressive and inventive menu. Try the "Bartender Roulette" option, where you can get a custom cocktail after telling your server about your tastes. If you need to pick up lunch or snacks for the road, SLO Provisions (sloprovisions.com) specializes in salads, sandwiches and baked treats.

🙆 Santa Barbara's Funk Zone

There is no shortage of places to wine and dine in delightful Santa Barbara. Chock full of watering holes and eateries, the city's walkable Funk Zone (funkzone.net) arts and culture district is a great place to start. Decorated with a mosaic of shiny pennies, the Funk Zone's aptly-named Lucky Penny (luckypennysb.com) makes a mean wood-fired pizza (I recommend the arugula-topped "Ode to Dan Russo.") Also sip the region's famous wines at the Santa Barbara Wine Collective (santabarbarawinecollective.com) or have a few pints of delicious craft beer in Figueroa Mountain Brewing Co.'s (figmtnbrew.com) busy taproom.

Oxnard and the Channel Islands

You'll need to bring something to eat on your trip to the isolated Channel Islands National Park, Channel Islands Provisioners (cip.bz) can pack you a custom lunch bag that can include everything from gourmet sandwiches made with locally caught fish to intricate salads, homemade pastries and organic trail mix in reusable containers. Once you're back ashore from your island jaunt, a short walk will take you to the Waterside Restaurant and Wine Bar (thewatersiderestaurantandwinebar.com), which dishes up seafood and meats on a patio that overlooks a marina.

6 Moss Landing and Castroville

When I arrived in tiny Moss Landing, everyone I met told me I had to eat at Phil's Fish Market (philsfishmarket.com), a beachfront family business that has been around for more than three decades. I tried its speciality, Cioppino: a massive tomato-based stew crammed full of crab, fish, scallops, squid, mussels, clams and shrimp. A short drive away in Castroville, a town that calls itself the "Artichoke Center of the Word," it's worth stopping at The Choke Coach (facebook.com/TheChokeCoach), an artichoke-themed food truck parked at Pezzini Farms (pezzinifarms.com). I recommend the French fried artichokes with its yummy garlic Dijon dip.

New York bagels are made from salt and malt, and are baked in standard ovens.

The debate brings out a lot of passion on both sides. David Heti, in a story he wrote for Vice in 2015, made the point that no one in Montreal covets New York bagels, though Montreal-style bagels have a dedicated following in Manhattan.

It is also the titular tipple at a screech-in, a raucous ceremony where those "from away" are made honourary Newfoundlanders by kissing a cod-(literally) and washing it away with a shot of screech.

Canada ousts Finland, eyes gold against archrival U.S.

World championships scarce lately for the Canadian women's hockey team, they're getting another chance to end their drought.

Friday's final against the United States marks the 18th time in 18 championships the archrivals have clashed for gold.

Winner of three in a row, the American women intend to have their storybook ending on home ice with a fourth.

Canada has won 10 times and the U.S. seven. The Americans have beaten Canada in six of the last seven, including last year's 1-0 overtime victory in Kamloops, B.C.

Canada hasn't claimed gold since 2012 in Burlington, Vt. Over a third of the current team hasn't experienced victory in a world final.

"It's hard to put into words, but we really want it," forward Brianne Jenner said, "It would mean a lot to a lot of us here."

Canada blanked Finland 4-0 and the United States shut out surprise semifinalist Germany 11-0 on Thursday to advance.

The Canadians edged the Americans 3-2 in an overtime thriller to win Olympic gold in 2014.

But the U.S. women running the table of world titles heading into 2018 is not a comfort-

"We're on a mission right now," Canadian captain Marie-Philip Poulin said. 2We want to bring it back home."

Poulin scored a goal and an assisted on another in the span of two and a half minutes to put Canada up 3-0 after two periods Thursday.

Sarah Potomak, Emily Clark and Rebecca Johnston scored their second goals of the tournament. Shannon Szabados earned her second shutout with Noora Raty stopped 31 of 35 shots for Finland, which beat Canada for the first time ever 4-3 in the preliminary round.

The Canadians were quicker to, and harder on, the puck Thursday than they'd been five days earlier.

Even from before the drop of the puck, our girls were ready to go and ignited," head coach Laura Schuler said.

"I think today's game was important in our habit and our details and that's what we're going to have to bring tomorrow."

Canada will have a few more hours of recovery having played the afternoon semifinal, but the U.S. didn't overtax themselves thumping Germany.

The Finns, who beat Sweden 4-0 in Tuesday's quarter-final to gain a rematch with Canada, lacked the ferocity and sharpness of their preliminary-round victory.

The Finns were scoreless on six power-play chances, while Canada went 1-for-4.

The Finns and Germans will play for bronze Friday prior to the championship game at USA Hockey Arena.

For the better part of three hours, in a ferocious wind that made the Georgia pines creak, he had the right yardage for the perfect club to hit every shot he wanted. And then he made the putts, so many that it felt as though he never missed.

Hoffman made seven birdies over his last 11 holes for a 7-under 65.

It was 10 shots better than the average score Thursday at Augusta National. His four-shot lead over William McGirt was the largest for the opening round at the Masters in 62 years.
